

What could be your role in the market (and in society)?

Every human being has its own personal value, what is different for every other person. This value can be influenced by various factors (biological, knowledge, skills, experience, etc.).

First of all, we need to mention biological factors. Every human being is necessary for the existence of a successful society. We cannot say if men or women are more valuable from the biological point of view. They are both extremely significant and in the same way important for ensuring the existence of the society. Also, the weight and height can be an influencing biological factor. To decide whether a taller or a shorter, and a fatter or a slimmer person is more valuable depends on the position, location and environment where that person is situated, or where, on which market he wants to sell „himself “, who is the target group.

Also, we need to mention knowledge as an influential factor. The lexicological knowledge is necessary for the society, for some positions, as priest, lawyer, judge, doctor, etc. However, there are roles where the lexicological knowledge is not that important as experimental, practical knowledge (farmer, plumber, etc.).

The experience, what people collect during their whole life, needs to be mentioned, too. A person with higher amount of experience (very difficult to measure- with age is not appropriate) will be able to solve some problems, and react faster than the ones without any experience (experience about hunting, collecting herbs. the people with experience perfectly know how and where can they hunt an animal in the fastest way).

Furthermore, skills are abilities, what we have as human beings are very important. These skills are born with us. Some of us have skills in hunting, cooking or negotiating. These skills can be learned, but will be never so natural and automatically as for the ones who are born with the mentioned skills. For examples, there are people who are born with managerial skills. These are those people, who naturally can manage others, communicate with others without learning it from books. However, the other group are the people, the managers, who has learnt to be managers from books. They have learnt some practices, strategies, steps, what needs to be followed to be successful in managing. The managers from books, can be the same successful and the managers with born skills. However, there can be a situation for what the managers from the books will not be prepared, since they haven't read about that, yet. But the managers with the born skill will be able to react faster thanks to the intuition and their personal skills.

To define my personal value in the market is very difficult, since we know that the „price“ depends on that how much is able to give the customer. It means, my personal value depends on the other people in the society, how much, or what would they be able to give/do for me. My personal goal is to be different than the other people, to be unique, thanks to what I can raise my value in the society. Those „products“ are more valuable from what in the world is less available, or it is more difficult to produce them. This theory can be perfectly used also at a job interview, we need to show the company why are we different than the other people, what else could we provide them than other „competition“, the other candidates for the job position.

Also, the personal value can be raised by the interest. If someone has unique skills, and it is wanted by various people, the personal value will be raised, too. (For example, paintings, jewelry, buildings, etc.).

Moreover, some of my skills can be useful for the society, as communication, openness, 5 years' experience and connection with foreign people. Thanks to these skills to set up a business with someone from a different society or from another culture can be done easier. I am very creative, what helps me in solving problems. The skill of problem solving is extremely important, since during our whole life we constantly meet with problems, and after solving one, a new was is created.

Also, we can offer other services for the society, as communication. Us, human being needs other people, other people to communicate with us. Without it, we would not feel complete or fully satisfied. Some people who have communicational skills, empathy, also help the whole society.

Finally, we cannot forget the saying that we are so many people, as many languages we speak. In the world not the whole society is able to speak in English and no commonly understandable language us accepted, due to that we should learn various languages, to be able to communicate with more people in the world. I am able to speak Hungarian, Slovak, Czech, English and Spanish. This ability gives me the opportunity to communicated with the inhabitants of all the mentioned countries, plus with the people from other countries speaking one of the mentioned languages.

Also, my biological role for the society needs to be mentioned. Since the women are biologically meant to born a baby, a new member of the society, and of course raise the baby, teach him to be able to take care of himself without the help of others. Women also can offer service with their personal skills, of taking care of babies, or even born them to people, who cannot have baby because of biological reasons.
